Look Out

Berdos gets highest score of the week without CMC

Picked up the pieces like Brandon Aiyuk picked up the dropped passes in the endzone yesterday...

There's a famous quote by Tom Moore that I think of anytime I see Berdos's team. Moore was the OC in Indianapolis when Peyton Manning was the QB, and he was asked one day why Peyton Manning gets all the practice reps, instead of giving some to his backup. He said "Fellas, if 18 goes down, we're fucked. And we don't practice fucked." Clearly Berdos has taken that strategy with his team; if players go down, then he's fucked, but he'll deal with it then. Jokes on everyone though, he didnt even need his best players this week.

DREW ALLEN

- This was the 2nd lowest average Week 1 score we've had. Last year barely beat it by 2 points, but every other year, the average is 20 points higher. Has less preseason affected the offenses?

- Justin Jefferson is up for contract renewal this year, but has Sam Darnold as his QB. One has to give. Not sure what Jack would rather have happen at this stage.

- Speaking of Jack, he certainly let down this Gazette writer. First game after being predicted to win the title, and he drops a loss to one of his division title challengers? 7-2 All Play Record though.
- Josh Allen is going to win Donny a lot of games this year. By himself.
- First (official) year of the new defensive scoring, and we are seeing results already. Small sample size yes, but defensive scoring is down a few points on average around the league.

The richest player in league history had a statement game in Brazil this week

- Brian has never had a 4 game losing streak in the history of the league, even in his hole digging season.
- Starting out 0-1 gives you only a 4% chance of winning your division. Only one person has ever done that, and that was Andrew in 2019. So if you had money on Jack, Jennette, Holden, Brian, or Kyle to win the division, your cash out odds just went way way down.
- On the flip side, 1-0 teams make the playoffs at a 72% clip.
- May be a hot take, but Kyle's team...doesn't seem that scary? All his assets are shoved into that QB/TE position, which are the least valued of the skill positions. Bijan and AJB are the scary ones at RB and TE, but past them, we get into some shaky starting pieces. Zay Flowers would really only start on like 2 teams in the league, and same with James Cook. Has the window shut on Kyle being a championship favorite? One to watch moving forward.
- Even scarier for Kyle, IDP legened Foyesade may be more of a rotational piece in Jacksonville. In week 1, he was off the field for two full drives, and for some obvious passing downs. Lunchpail Oluokun may be trending downwards.
- CJ Stroud spent his 16th straight week on Michael's bench. In those 16 weeks, he has outscored Dak in 7 of them, including last week. Ryan Tannehill has outscored Dak in 1 of them. Drake Maye may never see the light of day.
- Justin Fields may suck in real life, but he can certainly pass funnel to receivers. George Pickens put up 10 points without a touchdown; expect boom weeks from the WR.

Jayden Reed was the WR1 overall this week. If only his owner trusted him over Courtland Sutton

- Week 1 Drake London may be the worst player in existence. It was a last minute switch that won me my week, taking him out for a "limited" Ja'Marr.
- Donny started Adam Thielen in the year of our lord 2024. At least it looks like he has Jameson Williams finally showing his ceiling. Expect him to be started the rest of the year and provide either 20 or 2 point outings.

- Holden spent 12 weeks out of 14 at the 10 slot of our weekly poll. The question is, will it be 14/14 this year? Drew may have something to say about that.
- Jack has email notifications on for lineups. I know what I'm going to be doing the next 2 days.

Bubba's Bus

- On the Beat -

Bubba Beans

Hello everybody, welcome to the Bubba Bus! I'm Bubba Beans and this season I'll be touring the country and getting you all the details on your favorite fellas.

This week we started up in the PNW with the Seattle Seahawks. The boys decided that 4 Seahawks were worthy of starting lineups this week and well only 3 of those guys really decided to show up as it went! The BIG man was certainly NOT Donkey Kong Metcalf as he completely was virtually non-existent. But as he was saying earlier this past week his team's offense is going to operate straight through the run game. And well they certainly did, KWIII put a schalacking on the Broncos especially in the second half to the tune of a 100+ yard game with tud tossed in there. Good for Donny's #2 skill position player score not named Josh Allen.

Of course all of DK's blocking did little to help Drew as he was kept in check with under 5pts. Now who scored more than 5pts you may ask? None other than Mr. Berry's Rayshawn Jenkins! Albeit 6pts still leaves something to be desired, but his hard hitting on defense certainly kept the Broncos in check this week, especially in the run game. And of course kickers are people too, or are they? Well Myers knocked in a pair, one from 50 and of course scored Berdos double digits points from the kicker spot because of course he did. The seasoned vet is now in year 10 of his career and looking for yet another proficient season. All in the salt water birds pecked away at the horsies, surviving not one, but two safeties and claimed a 26-20 win in sunny Seattle.

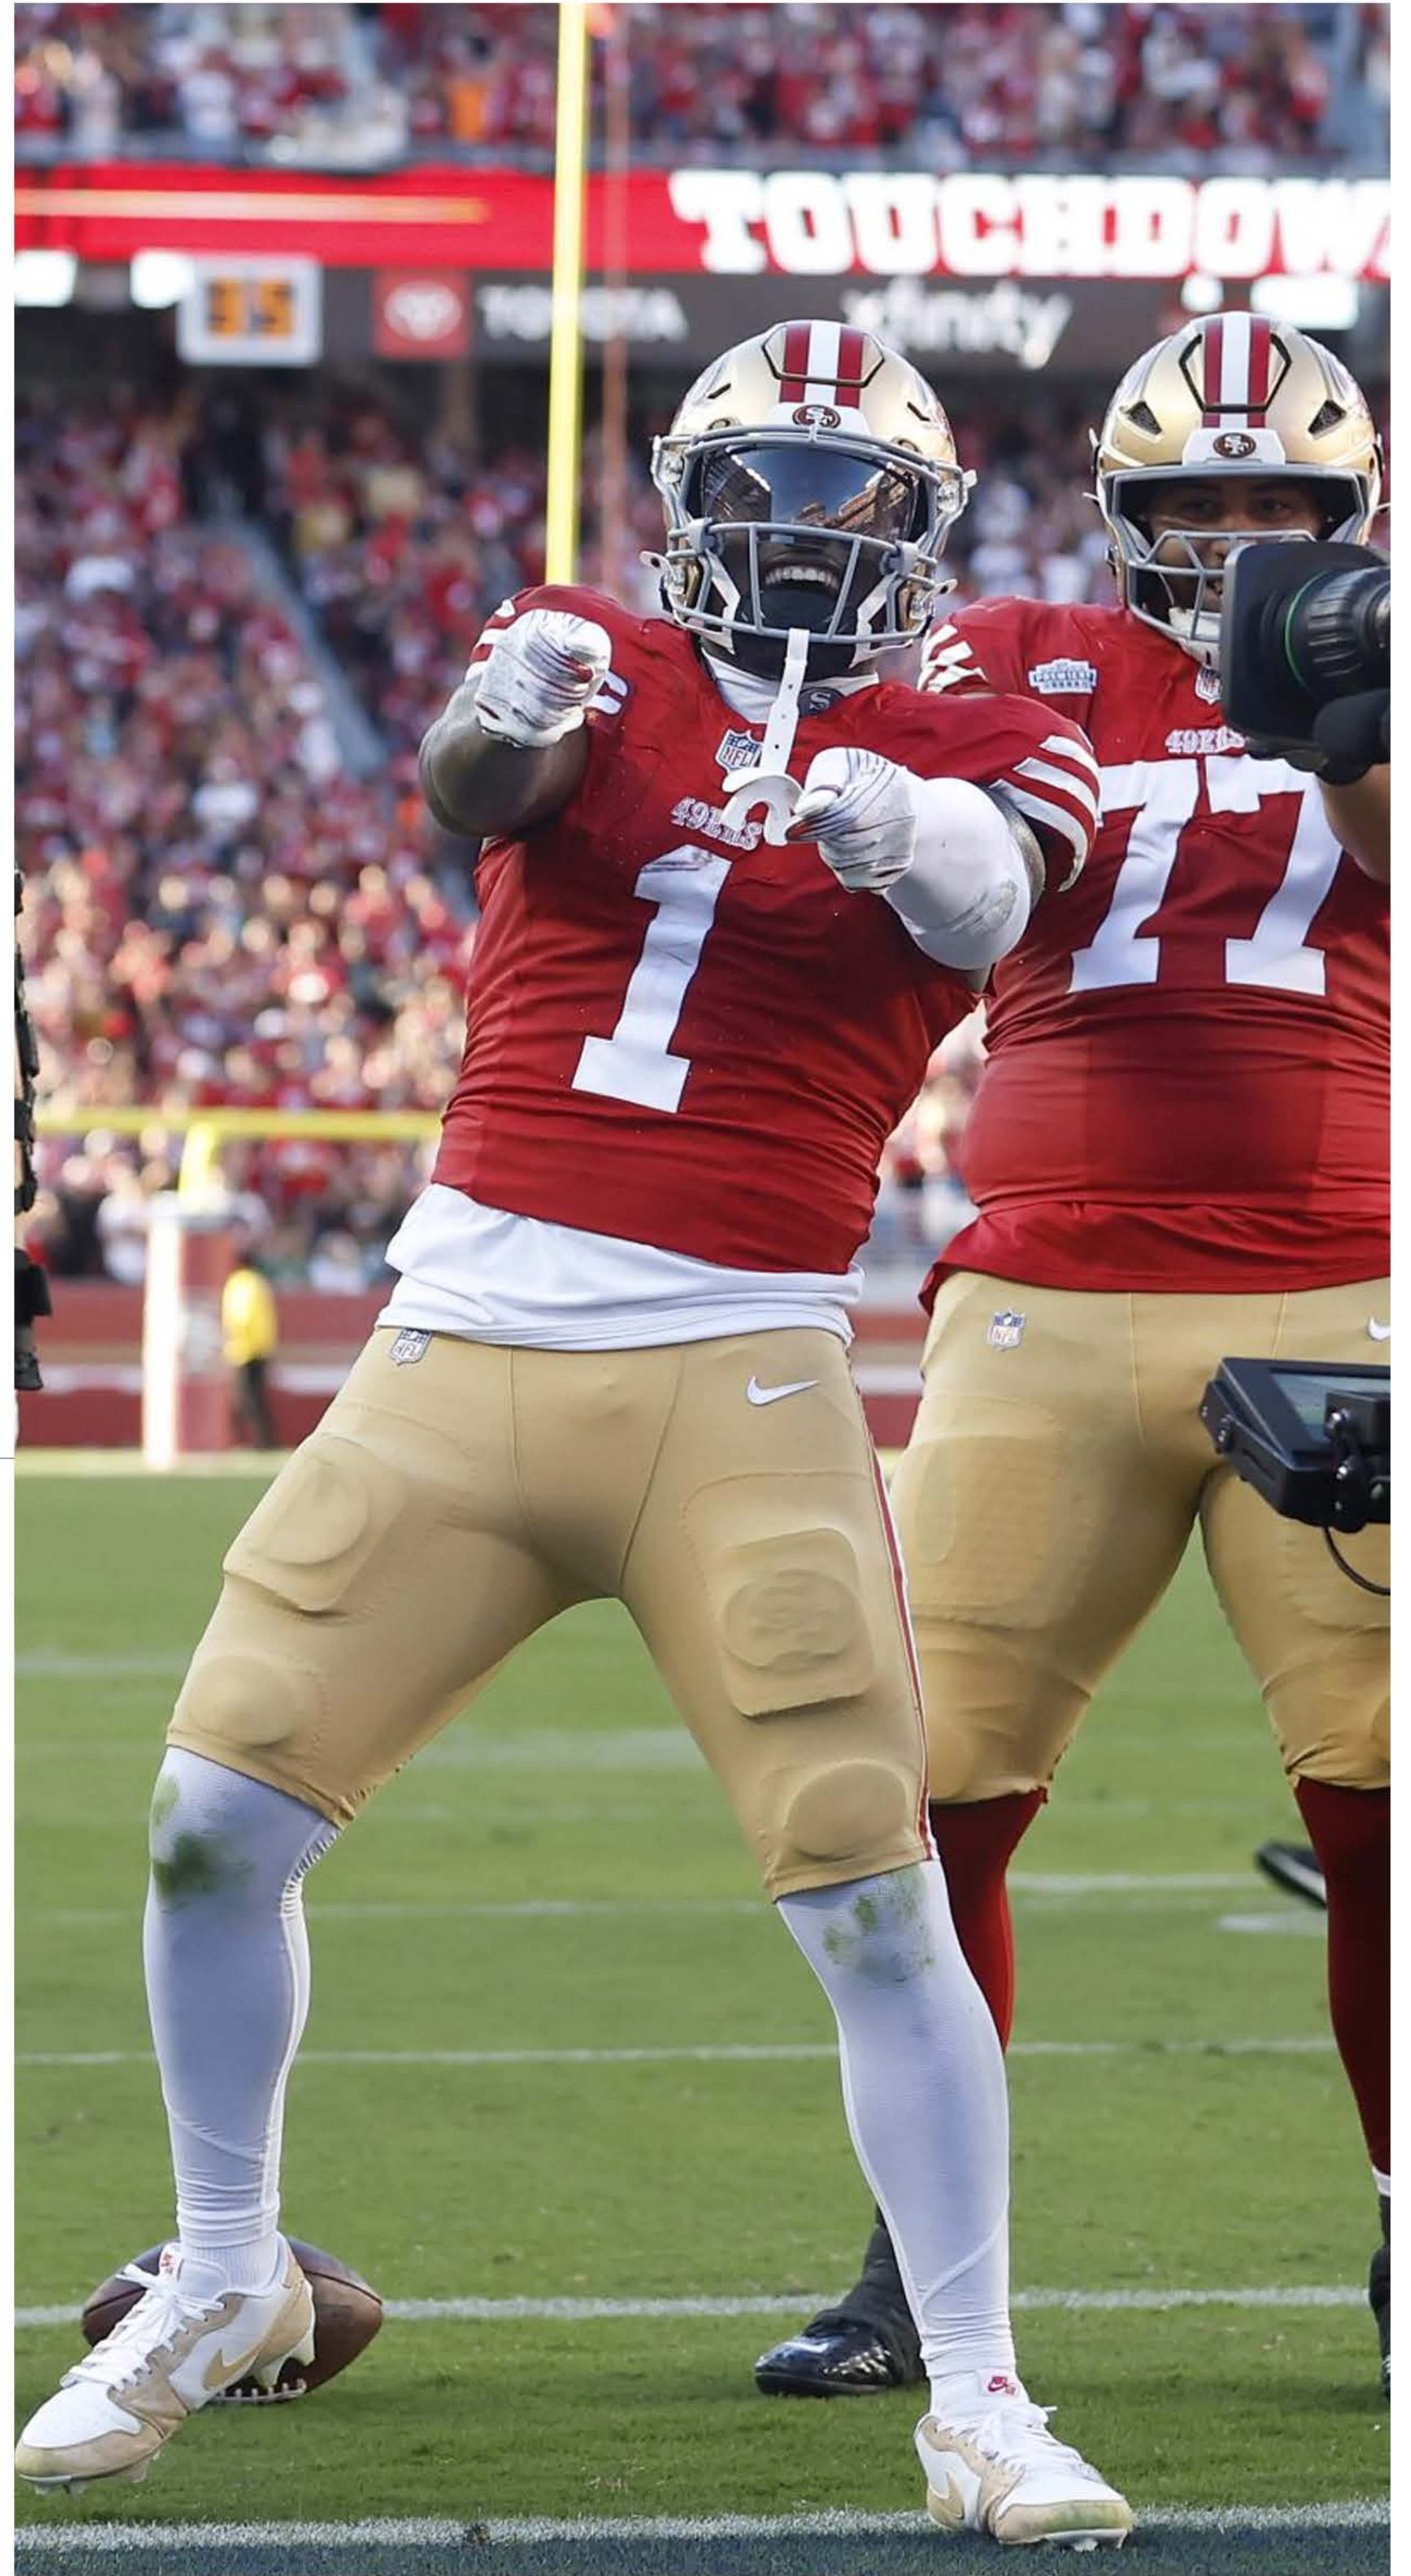

Our next stop brought us screamin' into San Fran on a Monday night to watch the great CMC back in action as the undisputed #1, surefire, must start, draft choice numero uno take on a tough Jets defense. Well... that's what we thought at least...that is certainly what Berdos must've thought as his dumbass was left handcuffed with an inactive player on Monday night. Ya, CMC sat this one out cuz his team is just that good and he is just that soft. His calf, or whatever, must've been a little too itchy cuz he was, like he typically was every year outside of last year, unavailable. Owner be damned and Brian be thrilled CMC was OUT on Monday night.

Now Christian might've been lying all week, but Aiyuk will be buying for the rest of the season as he was able to catch a new contract ahead of Monday night's game. Now that must've been the only thing was able to catch this past week since "he blows - Mike G." Aiyuk had a case of the dropski's against the Jets and unless stat corrections come up BIG Jennette will be starting the season 0-1. On the other hand Deebo demonstrated vulturing to a new degree, committing a penalty, taking a TD away, then scooping up the TD for himself. Andrew must've been basking in the that slime.

The rest of the starters were relatively quiet as Bosa did basically nothing for Donny, and Fred Warner's biggest achievement apparently is that he is "incredibly good looking - Andrew". Those incredible looks only provided an above average stat line. And of course there was the great George Kittle, who had a mid-showing but providing some intriguing rumors to me that CMC will back next week for "some of those fun plays - George". The gold diggers managed to dodge the crashing Boeing 32-19 in the sweet Santa Clara.

Next week the bus heads LA way! Toot toot! See ya then!
