The hole digging may be back on the East Coast this year

Picked up the pieces while trying to get Bill Nye the Science Guy's theme out of my head...

■ We were asked for some analysis on worst wide receiver rooms through 5 weeks. Or rather, we weren't asked, but we love some hard hitting analysis here at the Gazette. So let's take a look.

First off, with it being a flexible position where you can have anywhere from 5 to 10 players on your roster, we'll look at the average score per player, and the total score across the position. Michael currently has 236.26 total points at that position, which averages out to an average of 23.6 points per player. That's less than 5 points per game. Donny has 296.02 total points, which averages to 37 points per player. If you take out Efton Chism who has 0 points on the year, we get up to 42 points. Aka, stop your crying Donny.

DREW ALLEN

But this is not also a horrendously bad WR room. Berdos had a staggering total of 182.3 total points last year. With his 8 WRs, that average was 22.78 points per game. But Michael is correct that it's close to the worst all time.

■ Quiz: A cornerstone player can be considered a player who starts the first and last game of a franchise's season. To that note, who has been Brian's cornerstone player, and how many times have they started for him? Aka, who has started the most first and last games in Brian's franchise history? (Lamar would be Andrew's cornerstone, as he's started for Andrew in Week 1 seven times, and started for Andrew in Week 14/15 four times, for a total of 11 starts).

■ Everyone's favorite section!

#PathToThePotty is back and better than ever.

Waiver wire legend Rico Dowdle was extra painful for Berdos in replacement of Chuba Hubbard Let's dive in.

First off, let's congratulate our graduates! Holden wins his 3rd straight game, puts a huge gap of said 3 games over the toilet bowl, and seems primed to be safe this year. Things can happen quickly, but as of now, I'm comfortable to move him out of here. Congrats co commish!

We only have 3 members in this writeup this time, so it'll be a bit shorter. Berdos should feel hard done to be in here, as he had a 6-3 all play record, but his total all play record is bottom 2 in the league, so maybe it's fair at the end of it. His team is sticking together, and maybe Kendrick Bourne can offer some more help, but he has 0 cap, so I am not quite sure what he will do when bye weeks show up. Things could be worst, but they certainly could be better.

Jennette is sat at 0-5, and has 4 tough games on paper out of 5 coming up. The wins need to be stacking up, and they need to be stacking up quick. He will have to hope the Patriots start to roll over some teams and get Treyveyon Henderson some work, otherwise, it could be tough to get to 5 wins. Two big matchups against Drew as well still up, as well as games against Holden and Berdos. He certainly can control his own destiny, but time is running out.

Time may have run out for Drew in general. In his 0-14 year, he had an all play record of 17-109. After 5 weeks, he is on pace for 19 all play wins. Things are dire, and one of his hopes, Hampton, is now on IR for 4 weeks. He has 3 massive games upcoming, vs Holden, Berdos, and Jennette. But I'm not sure anyone will be betting on him at this point. Tough scenes.

Emeka Egbuka is making a case for best draft pick

- AJ Brown is WR47 so far. He is currently below KaVontae Turpin, Parker Washington, and Marvin Mims.
- Holden has a winning record vs two people, and two people only: Andrew and Michael.
- Harrison had a winning record vs two people, and two people only: Jack and Donny.
- Jalen Milroe is the only person on a roster currently with negative total points on the year.
- Quiz answer: Ezekiel Elliot, who started for Brian from 2019 through 2022, with a score of 8 total starts.
