Buck the Truck has no problems with Holden, just like last year

Picked up the pieces while sneaky wishing the Pats had gotten Jayden Daniels instead of Drake Maye...

■ Lots of talk this week about an Awesome division sweep. Alas, it didn't fully come to fruition. But let's take a look back at the one Fail sweep we had. That was back last year in week 8, and it is notable as it was one of Holden's three wins. It came against me, so in reality you have me to mainly blame for that. But only one of the Awesome division members would've beaten Holden that week so I don't feel too bad.

■ Patrick Mahomes is the most expensive QB contract in the league. He sits as of right now, QB13 in the league.

■ This is the earliest we've had every team have at least one win.

■ The poll may get a lot of flak for being random and chaotic, but that's one of its redeeming qualities in my mind. If we were looking at just stats or hard nosed facts about teams, we may as well just not have any discussions daily. Someone who gets top 3 votes and bottom 3 votes probably has reason to get both (but there are likely spite votes in there too).

■ Berdos's lowest ever score was 97.64. Odds that he gets lower than that this year sit at ~110. His average score still sits above 150; one would imagine that we drop below that mark before the year is over.

■ A major storyline this week was Drew moving to 3-0, and dropping the highest score of the week. Is that sustainable though? Devonta Smith is out for at least a week with a nasty concussion, the 49ers defense stifled Breece Hall so I imagine they'll do a good job shutting down Rhamondre, but we'll see. This writer isn't buying stock in Drew just yet.

■ On that note, let's do a stock up stock down section. A who's hot and who's not, a Buy and Bye portion.

Stock up: Jack. He's going to sigh when he reads that this writer thinks he's a favorite again, but he can't victory lap having 3 WRs in the top 5 dynasty rankings and also want to be an underdog. CMC going to Germany for help on his achilles means that Jordan Mason is a locked in 10 points each week. When he's benching Aaron Jones and David Montgomery, and no one really debates it, that's how you know he's the outright favorite, and his players are showing it.

Stock down: Donny. Last year's division winner was a sexy pick to win it all, but the wheels are slowly falling off a bit. He's only rostering 4 running backs, which means any injuries drop his production off a cliff. Owning 2 WRs on the same team in Houston is good in theory, but he's at the mercy of Stroud at that stage. Jameson Williams is boom or bust, and depth is minimal at this stage. It's not out of the range of outcomes that he steadies the ship, but it was a crushing loss this week to Kyle.

Stock up: Jennette. A massive win this week against Holden. Experts had predicted those two to be fighting for the toilet bowl come playoff time, and a two game lead for Holden would be devastating. Instead he gets the tiebreaker over him, and seemingly has figured out his team, even with Shaheed dropping a 0.

Stock down: Berdos. Is this it? If so, it was a good ride. When it rains, it pours. It has been a perfect storm of shit for Berdos. Playoffs isn't out of the realm of possibility, and a full strength CMC, Tyreek Hill, Nick Chubb, and Davante Adams is someone you don't want to see in Week 15. But the issue will be getting to that 6th spot. It's getting crowded down there, and I'm not sure he has the firepower to keep up.

■ Keon Coleman being late may have been the difference between a win and a loss for Donny. On what razor thin edges we play on
