■ Jack and Andrew have remarkably similar stats this year. Andrew has 158.3 PF, Jack has 158. Andrew has 126.9 PA, Jack has 127. Andrew has a max PF this year of 201, Jack has one of 200.

■ Speaking of, Jack is now the final member to hit 200 points. We had our first ever 200 point score all the way back in 2019 Week 3, when Berdos scored the long standing highest score ever of 220.14 (since broken by Michael). After 6 years, we now have all of the members.

■ Week 10 is officially close enough for the Berdos Cap Watch folks. For those unaware, he currently has 0 dollars in cap space, and has only one kicker on his roster, who has a Week 10 bye. Will he play no kicker? Will he drop a defensive player? Stay tuned.

■ Quiz: Kyle currently has only one player on his roster who was on his original startup team. Name that player. Bonus: There was a second player who was on his original startup draft that was on his team earlier this year. Name him.

■ Family Feud music intensifies Welcome back to everyone's favorite segment, #PathToThePotty, where I just get to rip on the suckbag teams across the league. This would have been way less fun if I did it a few years ago when I was losing consistently.

Starting off, we have a graduation!!! Congrats to Berdos for getting a win that throws him up the standings and gives him a 2 game lead from the chasing pack. Due to his big wins over Holden and Michael, he gets a week's reprieve.

Berdos is never going in the hole as long as this man has two working legs

Now, things are getting controversial here for the 4th spot. We could go with Holden who was battered by Brian, but, considering he also has the tiebreaker over Michael, he will continue to be left out here. But a loss vs Berdos next week may toss him back.

Michael therefore will take the 4th spot here. It has been 7 weeks so we have enough of a sample size, and it's been a gradual slip down the standings. Do I think he will end up in the hole? No I do not. Will it be close? No I don't think so. But he currently sits bottom of the Fail division with 3 of his next 4 against current and former Path members. Things can go awry quickly.

Donny is next, and he could quite honestly be last, but he has 3 wins so he will be spared. He has been helped by the Jennette win this week as that keeps his 2 game lead. But this team has started to smell really bad as of late, and I don't know how much better it will get unless Bill goes nuclear. He's averaging under 100 points the past two weeks, and he better figure things out.

Jennette finally got his first win this week and it was a big win over Drew. His team is also falling apart at the seams, but I still think he will have enough to stay out of the hole. At some point you have to think the Patriots get Henderson the ball, but who knows. Bucky Irving is also due back soon which will be a boon.

And finally, to our lovable dunce. Drew spent one week out of the basement before tripping right back down the stairs. It is truly dire. He has not been as historically bad as his winless season, but he cannot find any sort of momentum, and vibes are bad around this team. Again, in the past, 5 wins has been the benchmark of safety from the toilet bowl. Going back to last year, it has taken Drew 19 weeks to get his last 5 wins.

I wonder if Drew even reads these things anymore

■ Only one rookie draft pick has zero points so far: Jarquez Hunter, picked by Drew. Jalen Milroe though, on Andrew's team (but not drafted), has negative points this year.

■ With one elite game, Travis Hunter is now your DB2 on the year.

■ Quiz answer: Patrick Mahomes. Now, for the bonus, I was super excited when I saw another name on Kyle's startup draft, but then when I double checked his roster, I realized he had dropped him earlier this year. That player is Chris Boswell. Yes, Bus Boswell was on Kyle's original team. And he dropped him. So much for loyalty!
