Berdos takes down Raswissts, led by CMC, Baker, and Kupp

Picked up the pieces while wondering if QJ can teach Ja'Marr some things about scoring points...

■ Drew scored the 155th worst score of all time (pre stat corrections). He tied with himself actually, as Drew in Week 5 of 2020 scored 119.42 points as well.

■ In his 0-14 season, Drew averaged 118.1

DREW ALLEN

points per game. This year, he's averaging 121.8 points. The other 0-4 team currently is averaging 135.5 points.

■ Jennette hasn't won a fantasy game in 310 days.

■ The defensive player who has made the most All Week Teams is Fred Warner with 5 appearances.

■ Jennette currently has 4 "coulda won" games.
■ Quiz: How many 0-4 teams have we had in our league history? Name the owner and the year.
■ That leads us perfectly into our best segment (still available for sponsorship) #PathToThePotty. We had some huge games this week, and some wild results. Let's dive in.

The first big result of the weekend was Berdos taking down Kyle. It is so important for him to get as many wins on the board that he can before things go haywire with bye weeks and injuries, and the fact that he was able to get one vs a team with a much better roster is massive. 2 wins on the board, one of them against another challenger for the bowl; can he find 3 more? He currently sits in a playoff spot!

Speaking of, his other co favorite for the bowl was able to get himself a big result of his own. Holden beat Donny in very competent way, and once again had a good all play record this week, which shows it was not a fluke. He is top 5 in all play record this year! Now, a huge injury to Nabers may be enough to push him down the board a little, but I am hesitantly ready to remove him from this segment next week if he gets a win next week.

Over to our resident winless teams. We will start with probably the unluckiest member here. Jennette had the 2nd best score last week but it didn't matter as Jack bested him. We are in serious trouble here still though. Being winless through 4 is not a good sign for future success, no matter how you want to spin it. Tyreek going down doesn't hurt as much as it would in prior years when he was elite, but it is still a big blow. Alarm bells should be ringing here.

And now, to Drew. He is last in the league, last in points for, and last in all play record. All metrics point to this being real, and his team being a bunch of suckbags again. He spent 2 1st round picks to try and take a jump, and it hasn't happened. He is last in scoring for both offensive positions, and defensive positions. There is not one stat you can point to that shows he can get out of this metaphorical hole. Not great.

Looking forward, we could have some graduations from this segment, and we could have some new additions. Any of you 2 win teams; watch out. A loss could put you right here. Kyle plays Brian in a tough matchup, and Donny plays Jennette. That is a sneaky big game for Donny. Watch this space.

■ All time team watch. The current WR group we have so far is Davante Adams 2020 (averaged 22.100 ppg), Cooper Kupp 2021 (21.591), and

A new member on the All Time Team?

Chase (20.613). Puka currently sits at 22.125, and Amon-Ra is at 20.475.

■ Hunter Henry is the TE1 currently.

■ Berdos's franchise is the only one to never miss the playoffs. He's only gotten past the 1st round a third of the time though. Kyle has never lost in the first week of the postseason. He has 5 wins in the playoffs, and won last year in the 3rd place game.

■ Kyle is 0-4 on bets this year. He will mush you at a moments notice.

■ Quiz answer: 2. Drew in 2022, Holden in 2023. Both made the toilet bowl.
