Sit back, crack open a cold twea, and settle in

Picked up the pieces on confetti on the floor from my Rico Dowdle themed party...

■ Donny scored 86.35 points this week (pre stat corrections). That would be good for 4th worst all time if it holds (I don't count Jack's Week 17 game where he did score bad, but he didn't have a full lineup due to Joe Burrow not finishing his game (see: Damar Hamlin)). Donny had 3 people score under 1 point, 6 people score under 5 points, and 9 players score under 10 points. Woof.

■ Related, here is a list of Donny's players, in order of points scored, stopping once you get to his kicker: Josh Allen, Geno Smith, Cam Skattebo, Jason Myers.

■ We officially hit 1000+ scores in the statbook. Brian takes the crown this week with the 1000th best score, back in 2021 with a weekly score of 92.66. That is also his lowest ever score.

■ Quiz: Staying on this theme, we are all aware of that infamous playoff game between Donny and Michael. Give me the top two players who scored the most that day between either team.

■ For every 3 times Brian has a player on the Team of the Week, he leaves 1 of them on his bench (or close to it). Those unfortunate benchings happen around 28% of the time. On the other hand, Jack is very good at picking spike matchups, with only missing out 16% of the time.

■ Everyone's favorite section! #PathToThePotty! Do you smell that? Smells like we may have a new member! But first off, we must talk about a recent graduate. Holden, you are very lucky. Your loss to a former defeated team was very close to putting you back here. The way I want to describe it is the American Dad meme where he's looking at the meter behind him, and it's barely on the "you aight" section. You are barely hanging on. A few results go against you next week and you are here; this is your warning.

And now, a welcome to our new member! Is it unfair that he has the same record as Holden? Maybe! Has 70% of this Gazette been shitting on him? Sure has! But when you put up a bottom 5 score all time amongst 1000+ fantasy scores, you get some air time here. We are in the part of the Josh Allen cycle where he loses some questionable games, but don't forget, he soon realizes that he has to do it himself and goes and scores 40+ points. Beware. Derrick Henry will score soon as well. I am like a 2/10 on the worry scale for Donny.

Berdos had a chance to graduate, but he could not get a statement win vs Brian this week. Things can spiral quickly for him, especially if Chuba doesn't get the bellcow role back. Will we finally see him break and trade a 3rd round pick for cap space to get reinforcements (hit my line Berdos!)? Who knows. Either way, the worry is at a 7/10, mainly due to results elsewhere.

Drew finally gets a statement win! Ish. 118 points in your only win is nothing to write home about, but these are the games you have to win. Things are still concerning for him. I'm not giving him much credit for this one, but it doesn't matter how you get wins. Panic meter is down to 6/10. You just have to outrun the (second) slowest person.

The current slowest person is Jennette. It has been around 325 days since his last win. Things are bleak. At least he hasn't hit his worst ever loss streak. His current is at 9; his longest is 11. 10/10 on the panic meter. It still isn't over yet though, I still have more faith in his team over some others...

@ArtButMakeItSports would call this "The Creation of Adam"

■ Some fantasy leagues like to give an extra point if you scored above the league average that week, which basically says, if your all play record for that week was at least 5-4, you get an extra "win." If we played that way, 9 people would have at least two extra wins. Drew would have zero.

■ Quiz answer: Josh Allen was the highest scorer of course. He scored 26.80 points, that should've been easy. 2nd highest was George Kittle, with 12.30 points
