The Best

Top 4 teams all standing in the semis

Picked up the pieces while starting to shut off the lights at the office to prep for the offseason...

■ Here we are, and theres not a lot to talk about when Week 15 rolls around. I think the matchups this week went relatively as planned, no one would be truly surprised by what happened. So when that happens, its time to ramble. This week

DREW ALLEN

I was inspired. I promise you I did not search for it, but on Twitter, I saw someone who had analyzed their group messages using Chat GPT to give personality traits for each other based on their texts. Now I wouldn't need to use Chat GPT, but I managed to figure out how to download my messages to my mac computer this weekend. From there, I knew what I wanted to find. I would get a chat log from every Thursday through Monday, and see who REALLY are the Front Running Freddy's of the league. I was able to chart the texts, analyze, and try and figure out the "why" as well. Here we go, in order of LEAST Freddyish to MOST Freddyish.

10. Berdos
Berdos was actually the only person who sent

MORE texts on average when they were losing. Of his message numbers, he sent 45.8% of texts when he was a winner that week. Most of his texts during losses are usually complaints that are met with violin reactions, or they were images that I can only assume were some sort of Darth Vader homemade meme.
9. Jack
This number may be inflated because he wins so many weeks, but Jack finishes just above the 52% mark. Likely a huge factor in this one is the loss to Jennette where he was gone for 4 hours for Wicked.

A vintage Davante Adams performance wasn't enough for Berdos

8. Kyle
Our first med student sighting! Kyle sits around 53%, which is good and fair. I think his bit about TANKSZN really boosted his numbers here, but the Freddy Scale doesn't care about self deprecating bits.
7. Andrew
Again, this gets skewed a bit when someone has a good chunk of wins, but I ended up at 53.8%. I had plenty of suck years in the past and I'd like to think in those years I still texted, but the first inaugural Freddy report doesn't backfill!
6. Brian
Here we have a lower sample size. Brian historically isn't a big texter in the chat, other than Honks when the Geese make a play. He used to never text as he marched to the number 1 seed for many years, but as his team tumbled, he joined the fray. Final score of 54.4%.
5. Jennette
Top 5 is where we start to hit Freddy status. Jennette is known for sending injury tweets, which mainly falls in the "rubbing it in" category, so this fits. 58.6% for him!
4. Drew
This one surprised me a bit. Drew feels like he is always texting, but the data doesn't lie. I think a lot of this is skewed by Sunday and Monday night. If Drew has a good week, he's always staying up late. But if he's out of a matchup, it's an early night for him. Our first over 60%, he finishes 61.3%.
3. Donny
Top 3! The first ever Bronze Freddy award goes

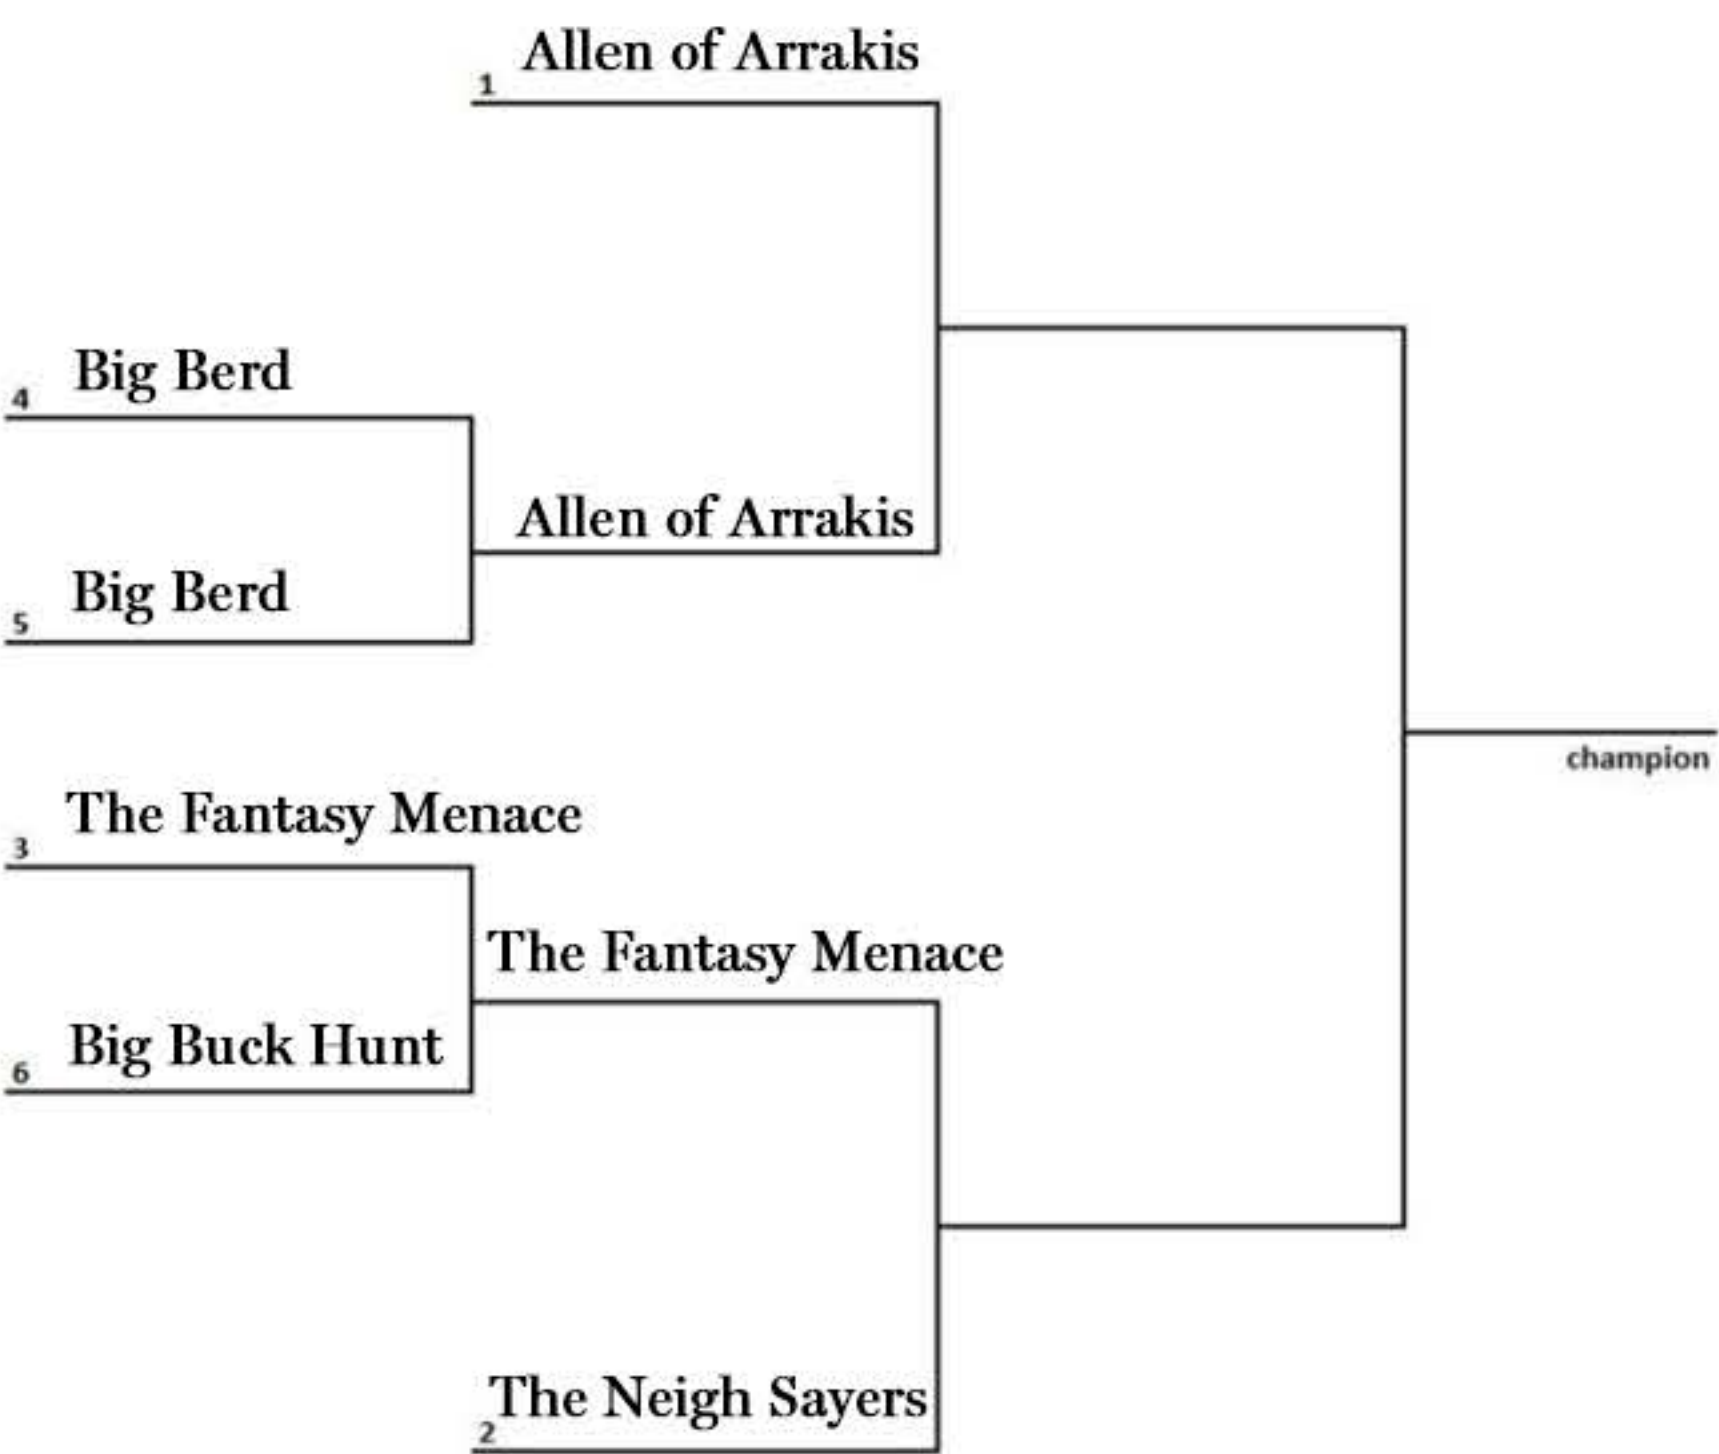

James Conner is heating up at the right time to Scherneck's best. When in doubt, you're working. That's a theme amongst the top 3. Donny had many wins this year, but during his losses, there wasn't a peep. 63.4%.

2. Holden
One of our smallest sample sizes! Holden had an early win over Kyle, and that really boosted these numbers. Week 2 was his most texted week by far. 65.4%. A silver medal!

1. Michael
Our first ever gold medal is awarded to the clear winner. The data doesn't lie. Week 7 against Holden was the key. That was a big loss, and the amount of texts he sent during wins just shot his percentage up. Most notably, on that Thursday, he said "i got the full day off bby" in regards to Sunday, and then sent 8 total texts that day, none past 4:30. Congrats Michael!
