Mauling

The #1 overall team rolls in primetime

DREW ALLEN

Picked up the pieces as three massive trades rocked the league yesterday...

■ Let's start right there. Last night we had 2 top ranked (at least at the start of the year) tight ends moved. Holden spends some future draft capital to grab Mark Andrews. His hope is that the beginning of the year is an abberation, not the new normal. I'm not sure if

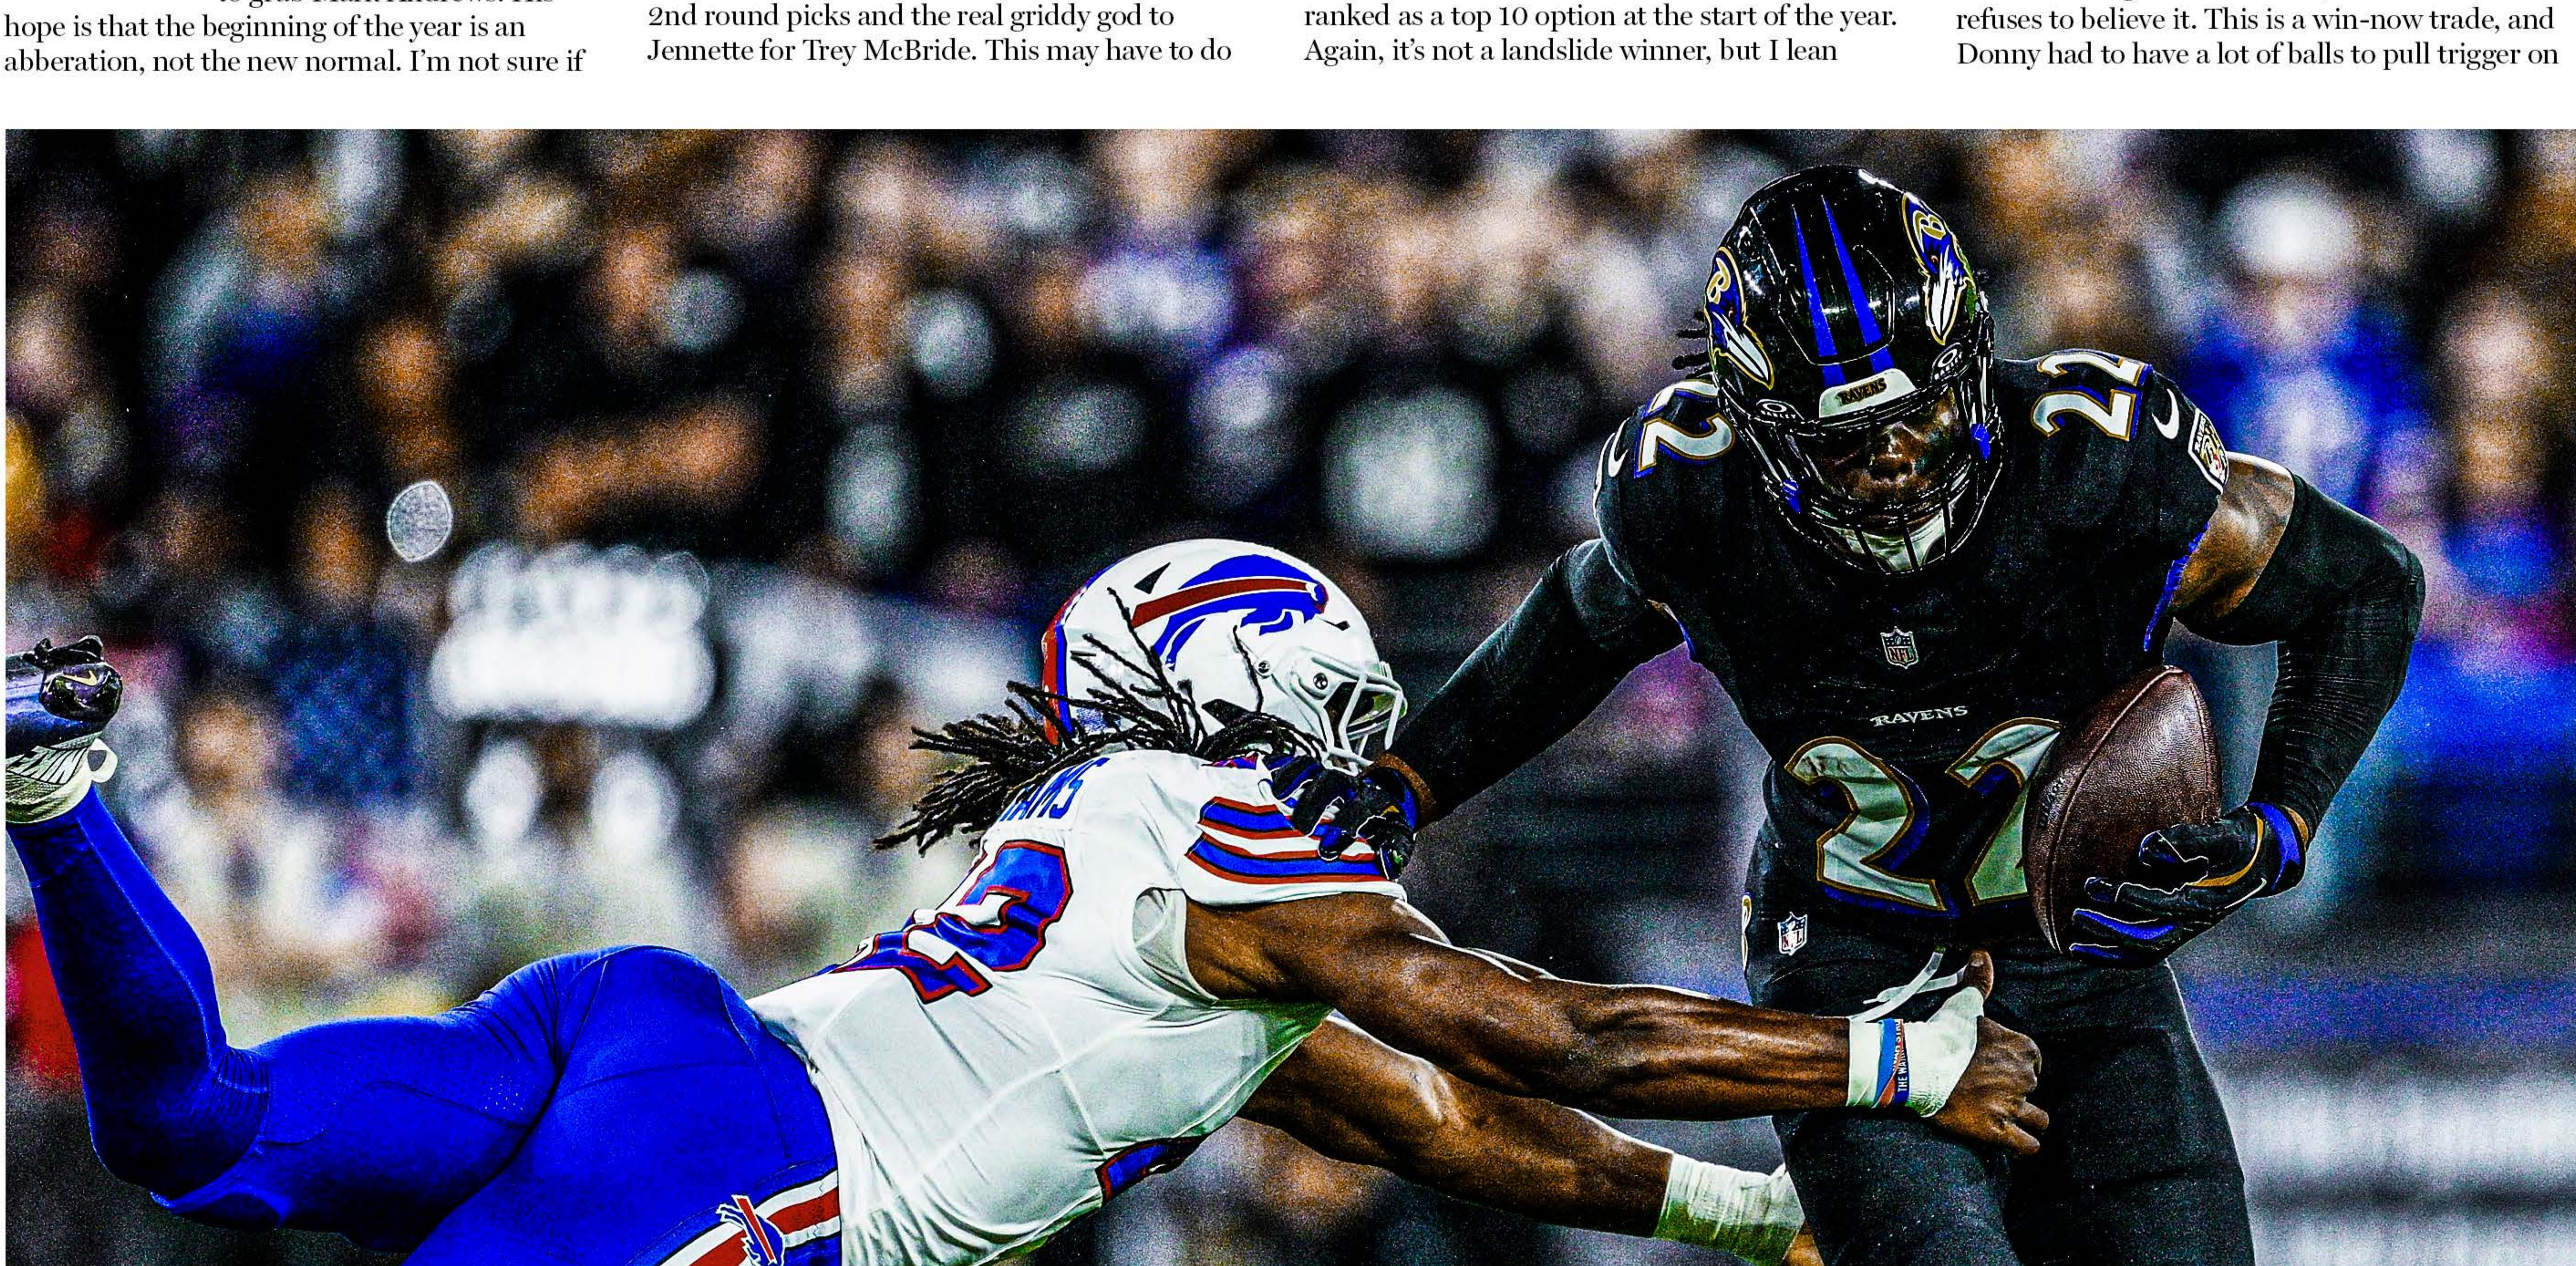

I buy Mark Andrews having a resurgence, but it's a risk he needs to take if he wants to stay out of the hole for now. A 2nd is relatively cheap, but if I had to grade these trades (of course I can, it's my fucking article), I give the edge to Jack

■ Immediately after, Jack turned and sent two 2nd round picks and the real griddy god to Jennette for Trey McBride. This may have to do with my general thoughts on the tight end position, but I think I side with the picks side again. Maybe it's because we've watched ALL tight ends suck at a level we've never seen before, but I'm not sure I'm willing to send picks for players when only like 2 of the top 10 tight ends were ranked as a top 10 option at the start of the year. Again, it's not a landslide winner, but I lean Jennette.

■ The last trade was the biggest blockbuster. The list of running backs who have garnered a 2 1st trade is very low. The list is Kenneth Walker III and Cordarelle Patterson. The newest member to that list is Derrick Henry. This is a high risk high reward play from Donny. Derrick Henry is coming off a 30 point performance and clearly has something left in the tank, even if this writer refuses to believe it. This is a win-now trade, and Donny had to have a lot of balls to pull trigger on it. The question I have is, was there anyone else out there who could be gotten for 2 1sts who maybe were a bit younger? That's a question I can't answer. It's easy to look at KTC and see who is "valued" the same as 2 1sts, but the owner has to be willing to sell. I doubt Brian is selling Jahmyr Gibbs or Achane for 2 1sts. If you are Brian, you hit my line up. But this is a very risky trade. If it works, it works, and kudos to Donny for going for it. We've seen a recent example with Berdos selling picks for win now pieces. If Donny can get the bye, then I will sign off on this trade. But it will be tough to catch Jack at the top. On the other side, Jennette had a backlog of RBs and decides to cash out. He has a lot of picks coming up, a lot of high value picks, and he will be a big player in the upcoming drafts. Diggs can offer some points as well, but for a team close to the hole, it is a risky move on his part as well.

King Henry was on the move two nights in a row!

■ On a different note, I love trades. I appreciate people trying to improve their team, even if I didn't choose you as a winner. I'm not smarter than anyone else, the best trades I ever made have been the ones you guys have rejected me on, because looking back I was the one who would've lost badly. But I much prefer a lively league than a league where people sit on their team. Reminder that we have conditional trades as well; no one has done that yet. Someone could trade for a potential top 10 player with the condition if they reached that top 10 tier, you get a pick back!

■ We are 4 weeks in, and there are very clear tiers I feel of teams. Jack is on a different level than everyone else right now. He'd be the betting favorite and it wouldn't be close. After that, there is a group of like 6 teams that have had good weeks and bad weeks. That's the group that's the most interesting to me. Some of them have to turn into true contenders at some point right? Maybe?

Kenneth Walker scored 3 TDs in prime time to send Donny to the victory

■ 3 of the bottom 5 teams in the power rank report on the MFL website are previous hole diggers. We are getting closer and closer to a repeat hole digger as the years go on, but maybe Kyle or Berdos takes the unfortunate crown this

■ Kyle plays Jack this week. There is a good chance he sits at 1-4, and in serious trouble. How quickly things change!

Bubba's Bus

- On the Beat -

Bubba Beans

Assker missed a FG, bet #66 on the Longhorns would've made that one. Nick Bolton was mid at the LB position, and last and certainly least was Carson Steele yo-points who actually put up negative points! Way to lead your owner to the first sub-100 performance of the season buddy! In true Chiefs fashion they notched an ugly win over a mid tier team to stay UNDEFEATED. 17-10 over the Chargers.

Next week we'll actually get back into a stadium to see a game up in the twin cities and also check-in on the cheese heads while we're up north.

The bus is back with air in the tires! Toot toot! See ya soon!

By golly we made it! Pulling into Mile High I'd be lying if I said the fans weren't waiving "Free Bubba Beans" banners, but alas. I'm free from jail and back on the beat! Even got my bus back! Mr. Jennette thank you so much for bailing me out!

But man, some sick joke must've been played on us because we showed up to media availability and the only guy up there on stage was Mr. Microphone. That's right, not a SINGLE BRONCO was started this past week. So we went snooping around the facility and found out a fascinating truth, or maybe a proof...the Broncos blow. And by the transitive property (I used to work at a college ya know) the Jets must blow because the Jets pissed away a game to the lowly starterless Broncos in the rain in New Jersey. Yup, Broncos Country rode to a wet 10-9 victory over crybaby Mr. Rodgers. What felt like a wasted trip though soon got better as we traveled east.

We checked in at Chiefs camp and were very excited for the private T. Swift concert, until we learned the tickets were a scam and we were actually only showing up to a Travis Kelce Karaoke session. But regardless before the Chiefs took flight to San Diego (oh my bad, LA) we got to talk to the starters. And it was startling to hear that Patty Mahomes was still holding a grudge against Washee Wice.

So once the game kicked off and Washee got wiped out by Patty the most shocking thing we took note of was that Mahomes was now playing Mayhem rather than a Good Neighbor. State Farm must be pissed. Anyways Rice racked up a grand total of 3pts and doctor's appointment, not that it mattered for juggernaut Jack. But Mayhem Mahomes continued to be mediocre and only scored Kyle 15pts. He's only topped 17pts once this season. "Not good Bob." - Dr. Marvin.

Kelce cooked with his best game of the season, while Chamarri Conner fell flat in week 4 after a strong couple weeks in week 2 and 3. Harrison
